Two Distinct

Types of Dress Materials

blended into one—one side plain, the other either plaid or striped—will be one of the leading materials this spring for that class of skirts and suits which require no lining! But our lines are by no means confined to this particular class, as every new sort is fully represented.

QUALITY counts as usual with this store!

Very New

are these double faced suitings. (Rich Garnet, New Blue and Brown Smooth Serges, with brilliant, satin finish Roman striped backs. Weight medium; so's the price. A similar Serge with attractive plaid backs at $1.25 yard. Both are 48 inches wide—economical when width is considered.

Homespuns

with self and bright colored plaid backs—the kind that please nine out of ten customers. Width 54 inches. Price $2.25. Another line is in this way: Plain Homespuns that have a DIFFERENT COLOR on each side; both sides are right, but the brightest side is generally worn under. 52 inches wide. $2.00 yard.

Reversible

Get in Touch

with the CHOICEST Silk stock. It's here!

These Are

SHRUNK....

Genuine Homespuns, both plain and plaid; are steamed, sponged and ready for the dressmaker. UNEXCELLED for wear. Full fifty-six inches wide, and only $1.00 yard.

Black

is always popular, but here's one sort of black goods that's considered unusually well: A soft black Australian Wool Cloth, showing a liberal admixture of GENUINE Camel's Hair. 47 inches wide—$3.00 yard.

Our spring gathering of black goods from thinnest novelty grenadines to the heavier solid weaves, excels any previous showing.

At 50c Yd.

always a choice supply of dress materials here. Ladies who do not care to pay more than 50c yard will find some very choice pickings among these.

ADMIRAL'S VISIT

To the Loan Exhibition Was a Very Pleasant Occasion.

HIS COSMOPOLITAN CHARACTER

At 11:40 o'clock yesterday morning Admiral Dewey graced the Hospital Loan Exhibition with his presence. He took in every part of the exhibit, and appeared to be deeply interested in everything he saw. He said he was greatly pleased with the exhibition and his treatment while there. He left the building at noon, entered his carriage, amid the cheers of the bystanders, and was driven at once to his private car.

At 11 o'clock the civic committee, composed of John Waterhouse, Henry M. Russell, George E. Sufel, T. M. Garvin and Charles W. Brockmiller, accompanied by an escort of the militia of Somerville, Pa., and the Opera House band, were driven to the Hempfield yards, where the admiral awaited them. After exchanging a few formalities the admiral stepped into a carriage and was driven up to the Hawley building.

The party arrived at the Loan Exhibition at 11:40 o'clock, where a large crowd had gathered in anticipation of his arrival. The crowd at the entrance of the building was so large that it was with some difficulty that the admiral could gain admission. It was necessary for the soldiers to charge the crowd before it was possible for him to enter. Inside the hall a large crowd was present. The crowd was arranged in two lines by R. T. McNichol and Thomas S. Bennett, for the admiral to pass through.

His entrance to the building was greeted with a ringing cheer, and he graciously bowed and acknowledged the compliment. Everybody wanted to shake his hand at once, and had it not been for the timely interference of Colonel Robert White and Henry M. Russell, who kept the crowd at bay, the admiral would have been knocked down. In a short time, however, some semblance of order was restored and the admiral proceeded to view the exhibits.

A curious incident occurred when the admiral entered the building. Lieutenant Caldwell accompanied him, and was grasped by the hand by many persons and cheered and addressed as John. It turned out that he was taken for Lieutenant John Doddridge. Knowing persons tried to explain, but with little result.

The first person the admiral met after he entered the building was Mr. O. C. Dewey. A smile lurked in the corners of the admiral's mouth as he acknowledged the introduction and gave the "Wheeling Dewey's" hand a "vigorous shake." "Ah, a kinsman of mine," he said. "I am glad to meet you."

The admiral was first taken to the luxurious Turkish smoking room, where he was given the finest cigar in the place. He placed it in his pocket, at the same time remarking that he would smoke it at some more opportune time.

He was then taken to the refreshment room, but declined to partake of any of the viands that were spread there. The ladies in attendance presented him with a bunch of lilies, which he planned to the lapel of his coat. On passing through the dining hall he stroked several little lassies on the head, who thereupon became so abashed that they ran away and hid themselves. He then passed through the curio department and evinced a deep interest in the many exhibits there.

He was next taken through the hall containing the war relics. Here he made many inquiries regarding some of the relics on display, and explained that some of them were very familiar to him. Colonel White told him he was in charge of this department, which elicited from the admiral the response that he thought it fit that a soldier be in charge of a soldier's exhibit.

All the time the admiral was viewing the various exhibits the crowd was in commotion. There was a constant comment, especially from the female portion of the crowd. He was kept busy nodding and smiling to various persons in the crowd, who persisted in making remarks, some of them pertinent and some impertinent. At one time, when the admiral was commenting on an exhibit, some of the bystanders patted his shoulder, but he paid little heed to it.

When they reached the booth containing the war relics Colonel White introduced the admiral to Mrs. H. G. Tucker, explaining that she had a son in the Astor battery at Manila. The admiral said he knew all the Astor battery boys and that they were a brave and gallant set of fellows, who never shirked duty.

While the admiral was passing a lady who was standing with an infant child in her arms, he took hold of the baby's little hand and said: "Handsome little fellow, aren't you?" Other women having babies with them then advanced, and the admiral complimented them each and all in their turn.

The admiral's attention was next claimed by the art exhibit. Here he was presented with a beautiful rose by Miss Mary Dickey. He pinned it on his lapel with the lilies. He gazed upon the various pictures in the hall in silence. When he came to the half-toned engraving of his own image he paused and remarked to Lieutenant Caldwell: "Now, that's really a good picture. I suppose it is the best I ever had taken. It was taken from a photograph I had made at Naples, you'll remember. I was on board ship. Yes, it is really very good."

This was the last exhibit the admiral visited. He was taken to his carriage and escorted back to the Hempfield yards, where he again entered his private car. He was cheered all along the line, both in going to the exhibition and coming from it.

PLUCKY SAM WELLS

Arrests His Man After Being a Target for a Revolver—After Being Shot in the Hand, He Captures His Assailant.

Officer Sam Wells had a close shave for his life yesterday. As it was, he got a bullet wound that will always be a souvenir of the occasion. The husky officer's bravery was put to the test and he came out of the fray with flying colors, wounded as he was, bringing his man to police headquarters.

The officer's assailant is a stranger. He was one of the Wheeling & Lake Erie excursionists, and about the time of the departure of his train from the Terminal depot, about 5 p. m., he made himself so disagreeable that Officer Wells, of the Fifth ward beat, was summoned. The fellow had been flourishing an iron bar and threatening to kill any man that dared attempt to subdue him. On the officer's approach, the fellow retreated into the car, and as soon as Wells entered he pulled Wells' revolver out of the officer's pocket, and fired directly at him.

Just as the fellow flashed the gun, Wells caught him. The bullet passed through the palm of the officer's left hand, and grazed his head. It was a remarkably close shave, and only the officer's quick movement saved what in all probability would have been a fatality, as the gun was pointed at his head. In a flash Wells grappled with the fellow and soon had him hors du combat, and assisted by a Wheeling & Lake Erie officer he marched him into the lock-up. The prisoner will get a hearing to-day.

"Dewey Day" Troubles.

No cases of pickpocketing were reported to the police yesterday, except that of a woman from Demmon, Ohio, who was relieved of a purse containing $30 and some valuable papers, while she was at the Loan Exhibition at the time of Admiral Dewey's visit, when there was a big crush of people in the building.

The police regulations were of a most vigilant character, and the foresight of Chief Clemens in having fifty specials sworn in inspired citizens with a feeling of protection. About twenty-five suspicious characters were gathered in to keep them out of harm's way. Some were sent to the workhouse on a vagrancy charge, and the others were permitted to leave town.

About noon Special Officer Elliott arrested a Huntington man, named Randall, on the back river bridge, and he will have a hearing on a felony charge to-day. Randall wore a disguise, which was removed after his arrest.

BOLEN GETS THE DECISION

Over Campbell in the Fourteenth Round on a Foul—Burgo Finds Boyle Easy—Refereed by Oscar Gardner.

There have been but very few contests at the Metropolitan club decided on a foul, but the persistence with which Louden Campbell employed foul tactics last night, culminating in the fourteenth round, when he caught Sam Bolen by the knees and threw him to the floor, was fatal to the slim chances of victory he enjoyed up to that moment. For referee Oscar Gardner properly sent Bolen to his corner for this glaring offense against the rules and gave the decision to the colored New Yorker. The trouble with Campbell was that he soon found he was up against it. He fought straight Marquis of Queensbury rules, for Bolen outclassed him at close quarters from the start. Campbell tried clinching to keep out of harm's way, but the colored man was after him all the time, and bombarded Campbell's stomach with killing punches. In the fourth round Campbell caught Bolen around the knees, for which he was roundly hissed, but the claim of foul was not allowed. He fought foul in the next round, and he was warned in the eighth by Gardner for holding low.

His tactics in the eleventh round were particularly disgusting, and he capped the climax in the fourteenth, catching Bolen by the knees and throwing him to the floor. His efforts in this line earlier in the game seemed to be with a view of crippling the fast colored boy. Gardner's decision in favor of Bolen gave general satisfaction.

First blood was drawn by Bolen in the first round, and he kept the crimson spurting from Campbell's nose thereafter. He had Campbell wabbling down to Quetzown in the last few rounds, and would have certainly finished him before it went much further. Campbell's showing was a disappointment, and it explains the eagerness that he induced Jack McCallan to go after him recently with all kinds of challenges.

The preliminary was a clinch for Walter Burgo, his opponent, Frank Boyle, making a surprisingly poor showing. Burgo almost put him out in the first round, with body blows. Boyle was good only at long range. A right swing on his jaw sent him to the floor and out in the fourth round, and it took four minutes to bring him to. Outside of Eddie Kennedy, there is not a Pittsburgh boxer worth a tinker's tribute at in-fighting.

Oscar Gardner, who returned yesterday from Chicago, was given a great reception when he entered the ring. He refereed the preliminary and main events.

The crowd, which numbered about 700, was made up largely of out-of-town people.

J., chairman of the rights and privileges committee; Wm. A. Howell, of Rockville, Md., chairman of the committee on membership; G. L. McCarthy, of New York, chairman of the press committee.
